

The Application and job interview – Exercise

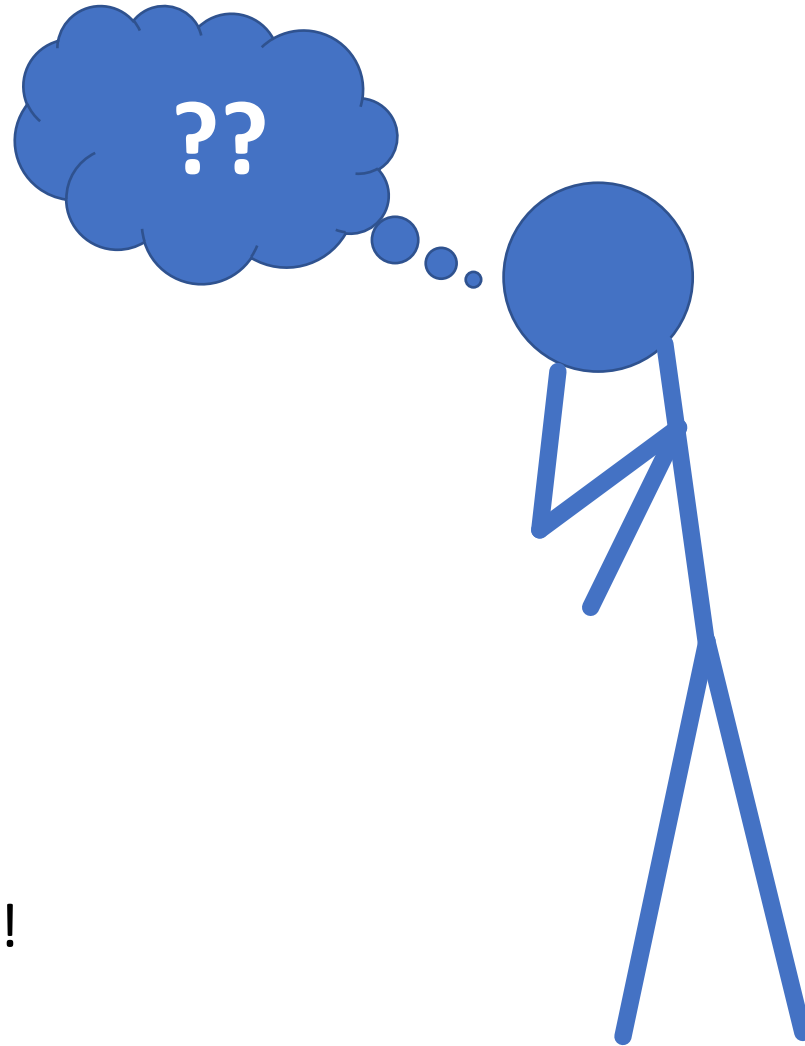

67 Lominger Competencies

1. Find the Lominger competencies that truly describe you. (List in Moodle)
 - a) 4 competencies in which you would describe yourself as "skilled." Come up with a short story to demonstrate these competencies. "Tell me about a situation where you..."
 - b) 2. Two skills in which you would describe yourself as "unskilled." How would you address this gap during a job interview without jeopardizing your suitability for the role? How do you plan to close this gap during your first year on the job?
 - c) Name two competencies you would describe as "overused" in your case. How would you address this issue in a job interview without jeopardizing your suitability for the role? How might this competency get in your way? How do you manage it?
2. Find a job advertisement for a position that might actually be of real interest to you. (You are not actually applying. This is just an exercise!)
 - a) Read the advertisement carefully.
 - b) What skills might be required here?
 - c) Does that actually suit you? Why or why not?
 - d) Which of your competencies should you work on to be a better fit?
3. Find a partner to discuss your answers with. Critically evaluate them for plausibility. Act as a "tough recruiter" for your partner. For example, by asking the following questions:
 - a) You say you're skilled in X, but your example doesn't convince me yet. Do you have a better one?
 - b) Do I really buy the story about the 'skilled' competency, or does it sound made up to fit the position?
 - c) Is what you describe as 'overused' perhaps even dangerous in this specific job?

Q&A

Vielen Dank für Ihre Aufmerksamkeit!

Die vorliegenden Informationen dienen ausschließlich zu Lehrzwecken an der Hochschule Aschaffenburg.
Irrtümer vorbehalten.

Vervielfältigung und Weitergabe an Dritte -ganz oder in Auszügen- nur mit Zustimmung des Herausgebers/Verfassers.
Email-Adresse: fabian.fuerst@th-ab.de

© Prof. Dr.-Ing. F. Fürst

